

THE refusal of the United States Supreme Court to interfere in the case of Theodore Lambert, the Camden murderer, now under sentence of death, is another vindication of the criminal laws of this State, and ought to be an effective lesson to notoriety-seeking lawyers that they can gain no advantage for their clients by these appeals to the United States courts, and it is to be hoped that some way will be found of shutting them off entirely.