

CAMDEN NEWS NOTES

 In falling out of bed, 18-months-old Philip Krayan, of 244 Libe street, so badly hit his tongue that he had to be taken to the Homeopathic Hospital for treatment.

 Some months ago Fireman William Miller, of No. 3 Engine House, badly injured his hip at a fire at Bennett's lumber yard. Yesterday it was necessary for him to go to the Jefferson Hospital.

 Half the companies of the city turned out to a false alarm sent in yesterday from Ninth and Linden streets, apparently by someone in a spirit of peculiar "fun."

 The funeral of Mrs. Jennie Chew, wife of William W. Chew, a life-long resident of the southern section of the city, took place yesterday from her home, at 928 South Fifth street, interment being made in the Harleigh Cemetery.

 12-year-old Frank Moffa, of Third and Division streets, accused of stealing eggs, told Recorder Stockhouse yesterday that he did so because he wanted to get an Easter suit of clothes. He was turned over to Probation Officer White.

 United States Senator Ross Penrose, of Philadelphia, was yesterday granted a non-resident gunner's license by County Clerk Patterson in Camden. Frederick M. Chandler, president of the Philadelphia Stock Exchange, was another distinguished personage to get a license to gun to New Jersey.

 Camden residents can now keep chickens in their back yards. The privilege was extended by the Board of Health yesterday in an amendment to the health code. This action was brought about through the active work of J. W. Whittaker, a representative of the New Jersey Poultry Association, not to mention the strenuous objections on the part of poultry lovers.

 According to twenty testers of a Camden talking machine company, they went out on a strike yesterday because their wages were lowered. A representative of the company declared there is no strike. The testers look after the motors on talking machines and have received 14 cents for testing each one. They say they have been cut down to 10 cents.
